AREADING • Read the text.

At Riverside School, pupils used to throw away large amounts of food every lunchtime. The student council decided to change the situation. First, they interviewed classmates about their favourite dishes and asked the kitchen staff to prepare smaller portions. Then they introduced a colourful salad bar and placed water dispensers in the dining room. Students can now choose vegetables, beans and fruit to add to their meal.

They also have a small compost bin for unavoidable food scraps. The plan has been running for six weeks and the amount of food waste has already decreased. Thirteen-year-old Daniel says he now tries something new every Monday. The council is planning a cooking workshop for families next month.
