A creative project for everyone [A]

A Read the following text carefully.

Last autumn, two friends, Sofia and Lucas, noticed that several students at their school wanted to learn an art form but could not afford private lessons. They decided to organise a free creative festival. Sofia, who plays the violin, invited young musicians to give short performances. Lucas, whose favourite hobby is photography, asked classmates to exhibit their pictures. The festival was held in the school library and a nearby community hall.

Poems were read, photographs were displayed and a short film was shown to families. Visitors could also borrow books and join a drawing workshop. More than a hundred people attended the event. The money collected from voluntary donations was used to buy materials for the school art club. Sofia and Lucas now hope to organise the festival again. They believe that creativity should be an opportunity for everyone, not only for people who can pay for lessons.
